minimal standards – training, licensing and registration – for gun ownership. After every high-profile mass shooting, there are calls for something to be done.

And yet here we are again. A celebration of our most American event ended by our most American tragedy.

"The Super Bowl is the most unifying event in America. Nothing brings more of us together," President Joe Biden said Wednesday night. "And the celebration of a Super Bowl win is a moment that brings a joy that can't be matched to the winning team and their supporters. For this joy to be turned to tragedy today in Kansas City cuts deep in the American soul."

It's a wound that is self-inflicted, however. We choose to live this way by our inaction. We choose to accept death as the price of our "freedom." We choose to subject our kids to lifelong trauma and stress because they had the audacity to want to see their favorite players celebrate a Super Bowl title.

Several members of the Chiefs comforted kids in the chaos that followed the shooting. Offensive lineman Trey Smith gave one child the WWE belt the players had been passing around and stayed with him until he calmed down. Coach Andy Reid hugged one distraught teen, reminding him to breathe.

Admirable responses, all of them. Especially when it just as easily could have been one of them – or their families or their teammates – who needed comfort and aid.

And grotesque as the odds are, someday will.

"When are we going to fix these gun laws?" Chiefs defensive end Charles Omenihu pleaded in a post on X. "How many more people have to die to say enough is enough? It's too easy for the wrong people to obtain guns in America and that's a FACT."

Of course the gun zealots were quick to respond. The problem is mental health issues, not guns, they claimed. Except America does not have the market cornered on mental health woes. We do, however, have the market cornered on mass shootings, deadly and otherwise.

They pointed to the part of the Second Amendment that says "the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed" while ignoring the part that says "well regulated." Or tried to claim "well regulated" meant something different when the Constitution was written. (They also ignore that muskets were the gun of choice when the Constitution was written, not automatic weapons that can shred tissue and vaporize bones.)

But it is the guns. It's always been the guns.

And when the day comes that a big-name athlete dies because of one of those guns, his or her blood will be on all of our hands.

championship. But for myself, I let go of, 'Is this going to happen?' It's 'Can I be better than I was last year?' And I worked on the things that I felt like I needed to get better at and just continue to grow."

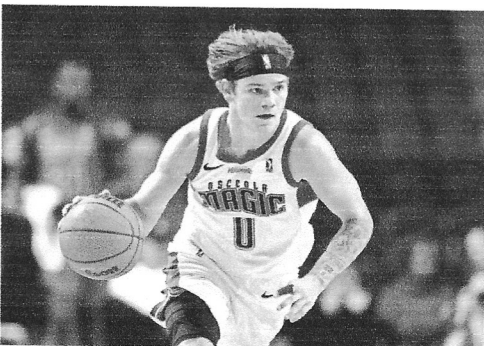

Playing again in the G League – this season for the Osceola Magic – the 6-foot-2 McClung returns to All-Star Weekend in Indianapolis to play in the Rising Stars event. "There was a funny joke of a memo – a 25-year-old rising star," he said. "But there's something beautiful about it, too."

McClung will also defend his slam dunk title against Boston's Jaylen Brown, New York/G League Westchester Knicks' Jacob Toppin and Miami's Jaime Jaquez Jr.

At Gate City High in southwest Virginia – small, mountain-town Appalachia – McClung became a viral sensation with his dunks and skills. For a brief time, McClung was Virginia's all-time leading scorer in boys basketball and scored 47 in a state title game in 2018. He attracted the attention of major Division I colleges and spent two seasons at Georgetown and one at Texas Tech, then declared for the draft in 2021.

He was not drafted and has spent the past three years trying to get a guaranteed NBA contract. He was the G League Rookie of the Year in 2021-22 and has proved himself as a scorer (21.3 career average) and playmaker (6.4 career assists per game).

To add intrigue and spice to the dunk contest last season, the NBA invited

McClung, who had at the time played in just two NBA games. With All-Stars cheering him on courtside, he won with a series of dunks jumping over people and 360 and 540 aeriels – he clinched the victory with his third perfect 50 score from the judges while wearing his Gate City High jersey.

"He solidified himself as probably one of the greatest slam dunk competitors that we've had in the history of the game," said Los Angeles Lakers star LeBron James, who added he had been watching McClung's videos since McClung's high school days.

Dominique Wilkins was a judge, and Julius Erving – two of the best dunkers ever – presented McClung with the trophy. Family and friends were in attendance, and his press conference that night was filled with joy.

"Everyone around me, I love them and they love me," he said. "I just felt really lucky. And I think that's the key to never forget how lucky we are to do what we do and to have the experiences I've had. I felt that and I still feel that to this day. That was the coolest part – just my family and best friends being there."

The dunk contest opened previously unavailable doors. McClung won $100,000 for his dunk contest, he signed deals with Puma, AT&T and Raising Kane's and he has a short film coming out this summer (nothing to do with basketball).

"You get to be in different rooms," McClung said. "I'm making sure I'm doing exactly what I want to do in life and to not really limit myself to one thing."

His G League contract totals $220,000, and his Puma deal is valuable enough that he turned down a seven-figure offer to play in China.

He has worked on his game – cutting down on floaters he attempted and trying to slow down his pace, moving without the basketball, setting better screens and applying more defensive pressure. This season, he averages 24.5 points, 6.7 assists, 4.6 rebounds and 1.0 steals and shoots 48.4% from the field and 37.1% on 3s.

"I heard a lot of GMs say, I don't know what he has to do. He's done a lot. But I keep applying pressure," McClung said.

It seems he's close. But there is concern is that he's not a true point guard – and he's trying to prove he can be – and he's too small to play shooting guard.

"It's just been unique because there's nothing to compare it to," McClung said. "There's nobody I know who's went through an experience like this. You have this popularity, you go places and people support you and they're following you online, but you haven't made it yet. You haven't done what you – and I don't know if there's a certain end point that I'm looking for – but I'm not in the NBA right now. But you have this popularity and you're trying to balance it and really stay true to the one goal."

"But there's been a lot of blessings from it. I've met a lot of cool people. I've got to experience so many cool things. But my life, it definitely changed after last year."
